—A gentleman called at the business office of the Appeal, yesterday and stated that a negro man and woman had been ignehed by a party of masked men near Hernando. The offense committed by the negroes was the killing by them of a white child. He stated that the child was put in a pen in the yard of the negroe's house and starved until the made its escape from the pan. It was caught in the act and killed by the negroes. An Appeal reporter interviewed several persons who arrived in the east, and is now prepared to receive orders from the ladies of Memphis. -The Fort Smith Independent, of the sixth, The Fort Smith Independent, of the sixth, pays us this hands to compilment: "The Memphis Dality Appear made its appearance on our sanctum table last Friday morning, after an absence of several months, and gladly was it welcomed. It seemed like the return of an old friend after a long visit to far off lands. The Appeal is one of the most valuable papers on our exchange list, and we have missed it sadly. During the reign of the plague it never missed an issue if was reduced in size to half a sheet, and its working force was, at one time, out down to one compositor and one editor—a fearful thing to contemplate, when it is remembered that at the commencement of the epidemic the Appeal establishment employed forty hands. But though laboring under all these disadvantages it never lagged in its duty, and never did it fall to make its appearance on the streets at the usual hour."

—The sensational vellow-fever story pub-

He separance on the streets at the usual hour."

—The sensational yellow-fever story published in the local columns of the Ledger a few evenings ago is bearing fruit, as witness the following indirect confessions in the editorial columns of yesterday's edition of that paper: "We learn that guerrilla cotton-buyers are on some of the roads leading into Memphis, buying up cotton at five and aix cents a paund. They represent to those coming in with wagens of cotton that the fever is still raging here as bad as evr, and that it is certain death to come into the city. The people are abliged to have money, so they sell their cotton for what they can get and go hack home to buy supplies from country merchants. The same business, we learn, is going on in the neighborhood of Hernando and other towns. If all the cotton-growers were intelligent and took the newspapers they could not be impresed upon in this way. The men who take advantage of ignorance and credulity are in a low down business, and deserve to be held up to seom and contempt. If any of our country friends will send in the names of these worthles we will publish them with approprihese worthles we will publish them with appropri-tic comments. Our leading merchants ought to look after the country trade and see that the cotton comes here and is sold at the market price."
